Leaves from the President

Hello everyone,

I'm sitting here in front of the computer, slowly typing in with just one hand – and feeling sorry for myself. I had some surgery done on my left wrist Thursday and it HURTS. The doctor knew I'd probably want to get out and trim something or dig something up and get all dirty planting. And he would have been right! So he put me in a cast. Have you ever tried to hold a plant when your fingers won't come together? Doesn't work.

So this all made me think about family and friends and how we can all work together to share our ideas, fears, and pain. I may not be able to plant on a beautiful fall day like today; but I can watch you. And we can talk and share stories of gardens and special plants and people. We have a rich group of wonderful people to share our passions with. That really does help. Stay close.

Bonsai Care in October By Don Martin

Fall is generally the climax of summer growth and the last spurt of growth before going dormant. Now you should anticipate and enjoy autumn colors. As leaves start to drop, remove trash from the surface of the pots. If clean-up is neglected, undesirable creatures such as slugs and sowbugs may come. This time of year, the day's sunshine is shortened, so reduce watering. A balance must be maintained of minimal watering and loss of moisture by transpiration and warm spells. This is also a good time to remove last year's wiring and check for wire cuts. New wire can be applied. Also give your evergreens and conifers one last feeding of mainly potash and phosphorous at 0-10-10.

New "Bonsai" book from Timber Press

Keshiki bonsai ("keshiki" means landscape), created by a designer named Kenji Kobayashi, is a different form of Bonsai. In his new book, Keshiki Bonsai: The Easy, Modern Way to Create Miniature Landscapes, published in October 2012, he shows you how to distill the essence of wild landscapes using readily available plants and containers. The results might remind you of a forest, a mossy stream bank, or a hillside. And best of all, they're easy to create and maintain.

The book contains thirty-seven projects, and each is accompanied by clear instructions and step-by-step photos. Kenji Kobayashi studied engineering and landscape design in his native Japan before learning about bonsai in Portland, Oregon. He has since returned to Tokyo to open a shop specializing in this form. The author's website is www.sinajina.com and the book is available directly from Timber Press or amazon.com for less than $20.00.

Herb Affair Celebrates Tenth Anniversary

Cynthia Polera-Waugh, Life Member
Orange County Independent Master Gardeners

Herb Affair 2012 held on May 12 at the Antique Rose Emporium was a resounding success, as Comal Master Gardeners celebrated the event's tenth anniversary. The emporium was the most appropriate of settings as the event featured the rose as the Herb of the Year as selected by the International Herb Society. Comal Master Gardeners greeted and talked to a constant flow of visitors (approximately 300 to 400 guests) throughout the day.

Meeting since early in the year assured that this year's event would be as special as always, but with the tenth anniversary and featuring the rose, every participant wanted it to be a most special occasion. This project takes at least 8 months of planning and numerous master gardeners giving their time and energies for its success. We started small and it has grown over the years. It is the highly anticipated Spring gardening event in the Bexar and Comal County communities.

The extraordinarily beautiful ambiance of the Herb Affair was designed to feature the Victorian era of roses. The interior of the building was transformed into a room filled with roses. The aura of a Victorian garden gazebo, greenery and blooms were in abundance as roses peeked in and about the gazebo.

2012 Herb of the Year, Rose Exhibits included:

Edible Flowers and Herbal Flowers
Natural Beauty with Herbs
Pressing Flowers and Herbs
Tussie-Mussies
Potpourri
Making Rose Napkin Rings
Herbs in the Landscape
Herb Gardening for Bees
Pestos
Sorbets: An Herbal Twist

Each table included samples for the visitors and how tos. The Herb of the Year is included in all refreshments and cookies are baked with the herb. Sometimes this can take some research and, of course, lots of testing.

The herb of the year for 2013 is Elderberry. Wish us good luck as we have already started discussing how to incorporate this in next year's event. We are thinking all herbs with emphasis on Elderberry. Also, we will not be able to have our affair at the Antique Rose Emporium again as they have consolidated their two locations to Brenham, Texas. We are very sad to leave but have always appreciated their assistance.

Hope this gives you some new ideas.
